THREW HIMSELF

Rather than Face a Charge of Family Desertion Quellet Ended His Life on the Elevated Railway.

Rather than face the charge of deser tion brought by his wife Thomas F Queilet, of No. 838 East One Hundred and Thirty-seventh street, threw himself in front of an elevated train on the Third avenue line at One Hundred and Ninetieth street and was ground to pieces. His mangled body was carried to the Tromont avenue police station, where it was identified from letters and papers in the pockets of the clothing. The only witness of the tragedy was William L. Wynn, the motorman, He was driving his train along at full speed, when in the glare of the light suddenly he saw the body of a man lying across the rails. He turned off the power and threw on the brake with a jerk that jos-

Wynn felt the shock as the front BROADWAY Cor. Canal St. wheels ground the body and when the train was finally stopped he staggered from the motor-box, half fainting as he motioned to the gateman to tell him of the tragedy. The train was backed

No One Saw the Man Jump. It was a ghastly sight that met the eyes of the passengers who crowded onto the platform as the fragments o flesh were carried into the train. The were taken back to the station, where the police were notified.

Later the mangled body was taken to the Tremont avenue station-house, where it was identified by papers found in the pockets of the clothing.

No one could be found who had seen the man jump to the tracks. Wynr said he was positive the man was stil alive when the train struck him and had not been killed by the third rail He said he saw him move out across the rails as if he had crawled from the framework at the side of the tracks. Wife Identifies Husband's Body,

A policeman carried the news of th man's suicide to his wife, and she hurried to the station house with their thirteen-year-old son. The body was too much mutilated for identification, but she knew the clothing, and was posi-tive that it belonged to her husband. Quellet was a decorator, who classed himself with the artists and got high prices for his work. Until a few months ago, it is declared by friends, his domestic life was happy and he never drank to excess. The apartment in which he lived is an expensive one. His wife, a pretty French woman of thirty-two, twenty years his junior, re-fuses to reconcile herself to the theory of suicide. She explained their domest roubles to an Evening World reporter
